two South Chicago street cars at the crossing on the Hammond street car line near Whiting, Ind. Both cars were thrown from the track and the locomotive of the freight train was derailed.

The accident marked the close of a day replete with minor street car accidents in various parts of Chicago in which a dozen persons were hurt. The scene of the Whiting accident is a grade crossing, and more than seventy-five passengers were in the wrecked cars.

The injured are; John Erickson, motorman, arm fractured and internally injured, and Mrs. Mary E. Harran, two ribs fractured and otherwise bruised. The car, northbound with Motorman Erickson, had stopped near the crossing and the conductor left the car, walked ahead, and looked for approaching cars. At the same time a southbound car approached. Its electric headilight confused the conductor, and he failed to see the freight train. The southbound car was just crossing.
